A new immersive installation by Ecuador-born artist Ronny Quevedo

[Miami, FL] Locust Projects presents ule ole allez, a new site-specific installation by Ecuador-born, Bronx-based artist Ronny Quevedo that honors the passion for play found in Miami's Caribbean, Central, and South American soccer and futsal communities. ule ole allez is one of three new exhibitions opening at Locust Projects in the Design District with a public reception to Meet the Artists on Tuesday, November 29, from 7-9pm.

As an extension of Quevedo's drawing practice, the artist has invited local players to activate the gallery on November 20 and 21 by playing futsal matches with chalk and ink covered balls. As a form of collaboration their play and movements will be captured through marks left behind on the gallery's walls and floors creating an accumulation of color and action. The gallery floor presents a colorful, abstract field as a space for creative expression through a sports game in which players add to the existing markers of futsal and soccer. Creating a vestige of community action, ule ole allez presents a new development in Quevedo's creative trajectory with an exhibition that conflates drawing and sculpture through physical interactions with the gallery and the viewer by inviting Miami's soccer community to participate in its creation.

A series of small drawings and sculptures accompany a new video work that foregrounds play as a transformative and empowering act of migration and movement. Filmed in advance of the installation, Quevedo interviewed former Colombian national team player Luis Carlos Perea about his Coroncoro Soccer Club and Valentina Simon, commissioner of the all female AGC League, to gain insight into their experiences in establishing leagues in Miami. Overlaid with footage of other local leagues, Quevedo's video pays tribute to the notion of duality and adaptability as part of play and starting a fresh in a new city. Combined, the live matches, floor drawing, and new works serve as a metaphor for the collective migrant experience.

For Quevedo, the experience of displacement is defined by adaptation, memory, and transformation. The defined movement of sports echoes this adaptability. Games like futsal enable a subversive transformation in players, freeing them from oppressive societal rules and expectations. By centering sports, Quevedo invokes an architectural and narrative space where boundaries are malleable, limits are negotiable, and competition is a generative force for evolving identities.

Quevedo first became interested in the parallels between play and migration after reflecting on his experience playing in indoor soccer leagues—operated by migrant Latin American and Caribbean communities—in New York City. Establishing a connection between physical actions and inheritance and memory, the artist explains that “The act of passing—passing down, passing on, passing the ball—offers generative contemplations of my points of origin.” The passion for futsal in Haitian, Central, and South American communities in Miami is significant and complements the artist's own experience in New York City. This connection is reinforced by the threat of gentrification to the sites for this ritual of play. ule ole allez honors the contribution of play and ritual in these communities by recording their engagement with the space and its impact in the development of contemporary fields of sculpture, drawing and printmaking.

RELATED PROGRAMS

As an integral component to the exhibition, Quevedo cultivated relationships with local Miami artists, Locust's local partners, and formal and informal futsal leagues to mount the matches. These collaborators and the wider Miami community is invited to come play in the gallery during the first two days of the 2022 FIFA World Cup: November 20, 2-5pm and November 21, 5-8pm. Play will be 20 minutes long, divided into 10 minute halves, and 5v5 matches. If you're interested, participants must RSVP by filling the form on this link <https://forms.gle/neH6n943irrYRTEa6> no later than Friday, November 18.

ABOUT RONNY QUEVEDO

Ronny Quevedo (b.1981) incorporates and subverts aspects of abstraction, painting, collage, cartography, and sports imagery in a practice spanning installation, drawings, and prints. Deeply engaged with notions of identity and the intersection of mainstream and historically marginalized cultures, Quevedo reenvisioned pre- and post-colonial iconographies, offering nuanced examinations of personal and social histories. This recuperation of indigenous languages of abstraction, the revalorization of their associated labor, and the centering of a living connection between contemporary and centuries-old cultural markers remain key to Quevedo's ongoing practice.
